The Unfortunate Destruction of Los Alamos Heritage Rock

Heaven Wept Today

While the bigwigs gathered under a tent under drizzling rain
To celebrate the success
Of the completion of the project
Connecting two roads together.

The ancient ones cried.
Modern progress erased their traces,
The grinding stones that had stood for eons,
The graffiti marking the passage of two young boys,
A marker in the place in the universe.

An archeologist forgot to mention the huge rocks
So earthmovers broke and displaced them.
"It is progress.
It makes it possible for more cars to move more easily."

Few dignitaries noted the insignificant sign
Or the heap of broken boulders.
Heaven wept.
I did too.

An etching from Los Alamos Heritage rock

For over a hundred years a granite rock formation in French Valley was a treasured landmark, a touchstone to the past where long-ago residents ground acorns and pioneers carved their names and initials. Children climbed the rock and traced the etched markings with their fingers and imagined the people who had touched and climbed the rock long ago. Unfortunately, during a field study for the widening of Clinton Keith Road, an archeologist misinterpreted the etchings on the rock that were made over one hundred years old as being “modern graffiti”. This is difficult to understand since the boulders were already identified as Riverside County archaeological site CA-RIV-11585, a site eligible for both California and National Registered Historical Sites. The rock formation was bulldozed on Friday, June 17, 2022, to make a six-lane road extension.

Larsen's Barber Shop and Pool Hall Robbed

O.E. Larson's barber shop and pool hall was robbed of sixty dollars last Thursday night. It was no doubt the work of an inexperienced burglar as the culprit crawled through one of the windows which he had pried open and in the effort to get to the money drawer left foot prints on a chair which were close by. No arrests have been made so far.
